

Neurodivergent Workplaces

Template for Neuroinclusion Strategy

Please find step by step process on how to create neurodivergent inclusive organizations

1. Assess Current State and Commit to Long-Term Action

Objectives:

- Acknowledge the journey toward neuroinclusion is ongoing, recognizing the inherent neurodiversity within your team. This journey involves not only new hires but valuing the diverse thinkers currently employed, including those not yet comfortable disclosing their neurodivergence.
- Initiate by evaluating the current status of neuroinclusion within your organization, followed by the formulation and commitment to a sustained action plan. Demonstrating an enduring commitment to this cause is crucial.
- Upskilling HR in supporting neurodivergent employees is vital, as organizations with capable HR have reported positive impacts from their neuroinclusion efforts.

2. Foster an Open and Supportive Culture

Objectives:

- Cultivate an environment where discussing neurodiversity is encouraged, enhancing awareness and understanding across all staff levels. This understanding facilitates a supportive atmosphere for varied working styles and needs.
- Encourage conversations about neurodiversity and its organizational benefits, aiming for a culture where employees feel safe to request support without fear of judgment.

3. Incorporate Neurodiversity into Daily Management Practice

Objectives:

- Adapt people management practices to account for neurodiversity, recognizing that standard workplace designs may not accommodate this diversity.
- Managers should adopt a person-centric approach, appreciating each team member's unique strengths and preferences, and integrate neurodiversity considerations into their daily management routines.

4. Empower Employees in Their Professional Journey

Objectives:

Tasks:

- Recognize the individual needs of neurodivergent employees, avoiding assumptions about their requirements. Instead, be guided by their personal insights into what support they need to excel.
- Promote an inclusive dialogue about workplace adjustments, making it a standard part of organizational culture.

5.Implement Flexible Work Arrangements

Objectives:

- Embrace flexibility in work arrangements to cater to the diverse working styles of all employees, focusing on outcomes rather than the specifics of work execution.
- Acknowledge the varied effectiveness of work environments and schedules across different individuals, adapting to these differences where feasible.

6. Prioritize Wellbeing Continuously

Objectives:

- Address the negative impact of workplace experiences on the mental health of neurodivergent employees by making wellbeing a central aspect of your organizational culture.
- Managers should actively engage with their teams to identify and address any wellbeing concerns, with HR monitoring and promptly responding to wellbeing issues.

7. Amplify Neurodivergent Voices

Objectives:

- Leverage the insights of neurodivergent employees to enhance neuroinclusion efforts, inviting their participation without imposing expectations.
- Consult with any existing neurodiversity or disability employee networks for guidance on your neuroinclusion strategy, valuing their input while ensuring not to overburden them.

Additional tip: Do anonymous survey to learn more what neurodivergent people in your organization need and implement ad hoc action plans accordingly.
